

Chef Wars

Chef Wars is a friendly competitive tabletop game where players are involved in recreating a dish given to them. The players will fight their way to make the dish as fast as possible to get to the next round. The slowest player to make the dish will get eliminated, and the winner will get the title of the next Alpha Chef.

Core Mechanics

Chef Wars involves sets of core mechanics which involve a set of cards that are facedown, and players take turns flipping two cards at a time to reveal their card's ingredients. The objective is to find the matching pair of cards by remembering their positions. If the players successfully match a pair, they can earn the ingredient card to make their dish. The game continues until only one player remains; they will be the next Alpha Chef.

In this game, we also created multiple dishes that the player had to recreate. Each dish has its unique set of ingredients that can be chosen from the cards. The gameplay is also intense as the competition heats up with each turn. Players must challenge memorization and strategy to outwit their opponents and claim their titles. As the round progresses, players are gradually eliminated until only one player remains standing.

System Dynamics

There are two system dynamics in the game. The first system dynamic is memorization. When players lay the cards on the table, they are unaware which card is which. It's the player's job to flip cards over and find out where the cards are located. Once they memorize the position of the cards, they can pick out their ingredients. Once they gather all the necessary ingredients, they can create the dish and move on to the next stage. This dynamic memorization system will help players develop the dishes quicker and help them become the head chef (which will be the purpose of the game) or the last chef standing.

With memorization, another system dynamic is sabotaging. Players can decide whether or not to pick their own ingredients or steal ingredients that are not theirs. In doing so, they ruin the chance of a player to get their own ingredients. They lose a chance to get their own ingredients, but it also slows down their opponents.

Experimental/Emotional Goals

The emotional goal of the game is to make players feel competitive as they are competing against one another. We plan to have the game be played with up to 4 players where the last player to finish a recipe will be eliminated; this provides a sense of urgency for players to compete, or else they will be eliminated. With this mechanic, the game also feels like a battle royale where the winner needs to survive to win; this can also bring out a survival type of emotion among players. In the story part of the game, players compete against each other to become the head chef; the story helps make the game even more competitive as a reason for players to compete.

In summary, Chef Wars offers a thrilling and immersive experience where players must use their memory and strategy to emerge victorious. It is a game that celebrates the art of your skills while providing its competitive nature where the victor can claim the title of Alpha Chef.
